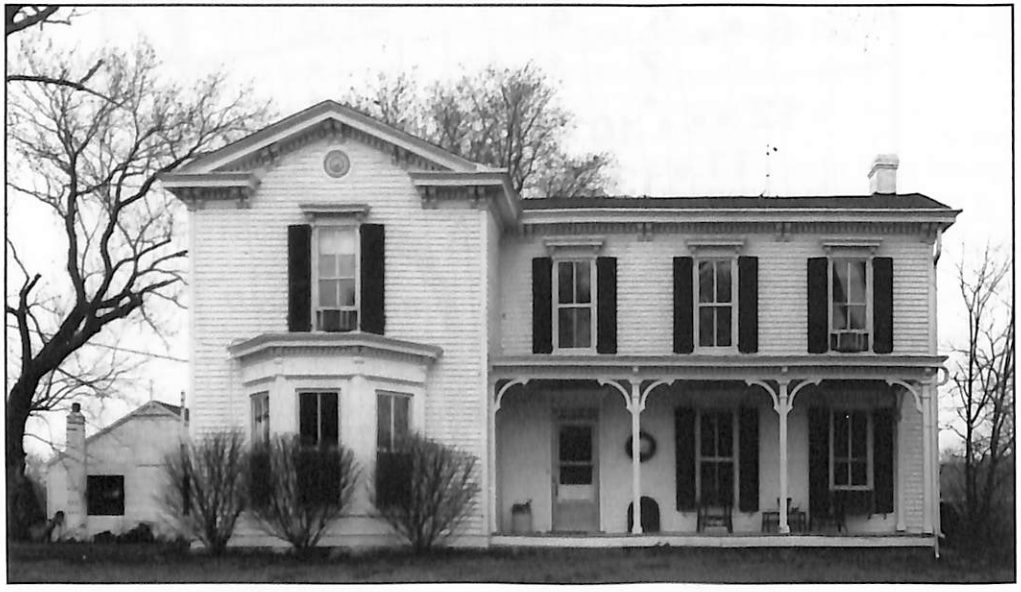
J.J. Gaffney House

This house was built between 1910 and 1927 for architect J.J. Gaffney, probably as a weekend or vacation home. The house is a significant early example of the "mannerist" style, which used details from the Arts and Crafts, Prairie School, and Mayan motifs, and blended them together. Site #136

Photographer: Jon Brown



Fisher House

15103 Old Taylorsville Road Fisherville, Kentucky

This mid-19th century farmhouse, built by the family on whose land the town was developed and for whom it was named, features Victorian era elements in its Eastlake porch detail. Fisherville is located between Louisville and Taylorsville and prior to the Depression boasted a thriving downtown and springs-based health resort. Site #92

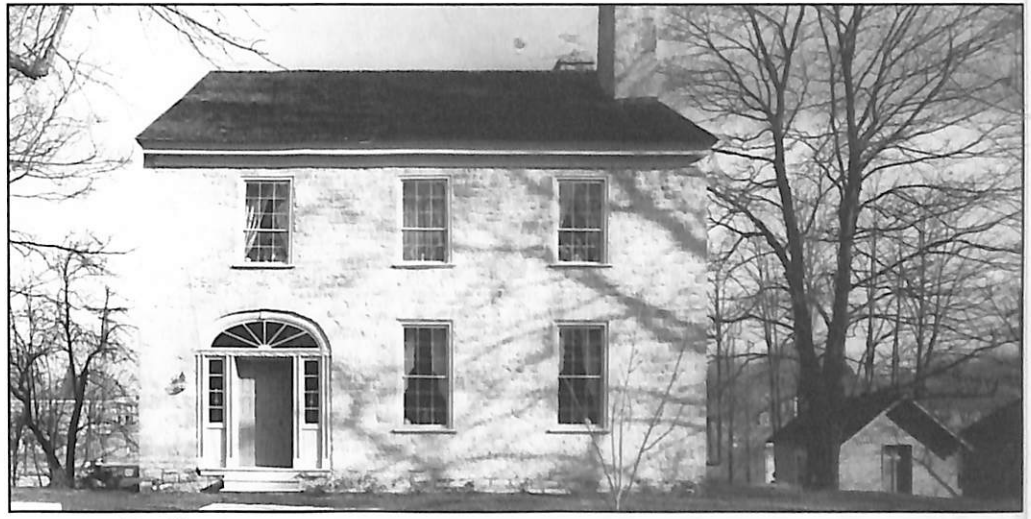
Photographer: Jon Brown

Benjamin Head House

11601 Main Street Middletown, Kentucky

Built about 1813-1815, this house, with antecedents of both the Georgian and Federal styles, is an unusual example of a side hall plan I-house and features exceptional stonework construction. It reflects Middletown's early settlement and importance as a community midway between Louisville and Shelbyville. Site #118

Photographer: Jon Brown



Bellevoir

LaGrange Road at Whipps Mill Road

Built about 1867 for Hamilton Ormsby, Bellevoir is an excellent example of an Italianate country house. The forward projecting center bay contains a recessed entrance and paired, round-arch windows on the second story. A graceful, curved iron porch spans the center of the facade. Site #116

Photographer: Jon Brown